

Megan King

Is the Violence Prevention and Training Coordinator for the Women's Resource Center of Northern Michigan. She studied Political Theory and Constitutional Democracy at Michigan State University. Her work is focused on the primary prevention of gender-based violence. She works with schools, businesses, and community groups to address risk and protective factors along the spectrum of prevention to help build safe and thriving communities.